I love reading English novels. At twelve, I was able to read a popular novel calling Harry Porter. In the past three years, my vocabulary <sup>called</sup> expanded greatly. Undoubtedly, reading novels <sup>has</sup> play a role in my vocabulary and spelling. So I advise that we English <sup>plays</sup> learner should spend some time read English novels every day. When you begin to read English novels, remember that it's not <sup>learners</sup> necessarily to understand each word. Not every word is important in a sentence. After you come <sup>reading</sup> into the word several times, you will understand how it means. You can also <sup>necessary</sup> improve <sup>across</sup> yours grammar after reading many English <sup>what</sup> novels. So why not <sup>your</sup> to open up a whole new world of literature by reading English novels?

Dear Henry,

I'm sorry to hear that you are having trouble fitting in your new school and at a loss how to set goals. Such problems are quite common. Perhaps these tips will be helpful.

Firstly, it's better to set goals based on your abilities instead of pushing yourself too much. Next, if I were you, I would break big goals down into smaller ones, which will be easier to reach. What matters most is to stick to your goals and work hard towards them once they are set.

You may find achieving goals difficult, but as long as you stay positive and confident, you are sure to make it in the end.

Best wishes!

Yours sincerely,

Li Hua
